INDIAN LEADERS

UNABLE TO PREDICT

Republicans Are Claiming the State, But Admit Drift Toward President Wilson.

RELIABLE DOPE LACKING

Special Dispatch to The Star.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., October 14.—Experienced Indiana politicians do not remember a campaign in which they were as badly muddled over the situation at this stage of the game as they are now.

Usually there is something in the campaign that enables them to get a line on the situation and on which they feel safe in basing estimates. But it is not so now.

They do not know whether they are afoot or horseback. All the ordinary campaign dope on which politicians figure in a campaign shows Indiana should go for Hughes and the entire republican ticket.

Indiana is a normal republican state by 25,000 upward. The most popular figure used by republicans in making claims to the state is a plurality of 35,000, and if conditions were normal instead of abnormal or subnormal 35,000 would not be far wrong.

But the trouble this year is that ordinary campaign dope means nothing, as Indiana as Indiana is concerned. Nobody knows what labor is going to do. Nobody knows what the farmers are going to do. And nobody knows what the German-Americans are going to do.

In the absence of any shadow of accuracy in the dope on these three elements, the politicians are unable to find out where they are "at."

Persons who are aware of a drift toward Wilson, but they do not know how extensive this drift is. And when the subject is mentioned they merely say that it is true, but that the dope indicates that Hughes cannot help but carry the state. They do not say a word to predict that Wilson has a chance for Indiana's fifteen electoral votes, in spite of the drift in this direction. In other words, they doubt if the drift will be strong enough to overcome the normal republican plurality in the state.

From all over the state there come reports of this republican and that republican who will vote for Wilson. In most instances names are mentioned. But the republicans meet this loss by pointing out that here and there democratic business men propose to vote for Hughes. And when some one mentions that a good many progressives will vote for Wilson, the republicans say this loss will be more than met by the number of democratic German-Americans who will vote for Hughes.

President's Appeal to Farmers.

The two speeches which President Wilson made here last Thursday, at the state centennial highway celebration, contained an appeal to farmers, because it so happened that the bulk of the crowd that heard him were farmers.

Whether the speeches, being of a non-partisan nature, will have any effect on the political situation, however, remains to be seen. The feature of the President's speech which appeared to catch the crowd more than any other was that wherein, without naming Hughes, he demanded that Hughes "put up or shut up." The crowd understood this to be a challenge to Hughes to define his position more clearly on the various issues, and they whooped things up for several minutes.

If President Wilson's speeches affect the election result in any manner at all it will be due to the fact that they were appeals to the emotions of the people. There was much favorable comment on the speeches, which was interpreted to be devoid of politics, fairly bristled with politics.

The republicans have been hoping that the President would come to Indianapolis and make a purely political speech, because they declare that the speech he made here less than two years ago, in which he dealt with the Mexican question, was a blunder from which he has never recovered. But there is no talk of the President returning to this state in this campaign.

Senator Kern Too Ill to Campaign.

Senator John W. Kern has been ill for a week and had to abandon his campaign. Senator Thomas Taggart, his running mate, however, is still at it and is making a hard canvass of the state.

The two republican candidates for senator, Harry S. New and James E. Watson, are beginning to campaign in the towns. Watson, who has the opposition of organized labor, because it says he has been against it in the past, threw down a challenge to labor a few days ago to point out wherein he had a bad labor record.

By the way, there is one district in the state in which the German-American vote may control the election of a representative. This is the third district, represented by Representative W. E. Cox. The German vote there is so strong that some democrats fear it may even overcome the great democratic normal majority of ordinary years.

Republican Managers Anxious.

Republican managers in Indiana have had a good deal of anxiety in the last week over the developments in the situation. This fact crops out in conversations with men close to the organization and who know what is going on. Up to the last couple of weeks Indiana was a certainty for Hughes and the entire republican ticket, and the republicans were not alone in this explaining the situation. Democrats admitted it, and they had little or no hope that they might carry the state.

But the whole aspect of the campaign has changed lately, and now the democrats are as cocky as a man with a ship on his shoulder. They are making the most extravagant claims, and they offer to prove every one of them.

The result has been a well defined change in the attitude of the republicans, who had lost some of their assurance. They are now admitting that it is a close race and that they will need every vote in sight if they are to win.

One of the things that caused the pessimism among the democrats earlier in the game was the fact that the republicans have been carrying on their campaign ever since the 1914 election. They have stopped there when the grinding and their organization machine has been hard at work for two full years. This was the first time that any party carried on a continuous campaign in Indiana, and nobody knew what the effect would be. Thus they had the jump on the democrats, for they already had much work done that remained for the democrats to do in their own party.

Democrats Wake Up.

This discouraged the democrats to some extent, and it was some time before they discovered the real situation. They found that the long-drawn-out campaign carried on by the republicans had become something of a monotony to the people and that they were tired of politics even before the real campaign started. It is believed now that this accounts in large measure for the apathy that characterized the situation from the start and which it has been next to impossible for either party to overcome. The people continue to refuse to become excited.

Within the last few weeks, however, the democrats have succeeded in getting their machine in motion, and the
